Mike Russell, being a normal human being, did not know that the name of a person who studies flags is a vexillologist. Jeff Burger did not know that 95% of all U.S. Flags are made here in the U.S. Chuck Moore had to pay to know that there are 13 folds when folding the Flag. Kris Kristensen did know that when displaying a Flag in the window, the stars are in the upper left. Gina Bravo had to guess that you cannot use the Flag as clothing.

Rags to Riches

With 7 cards and $728 on the line, Kris Kristensen won a free lunch. (Nobody took Kris's picture).

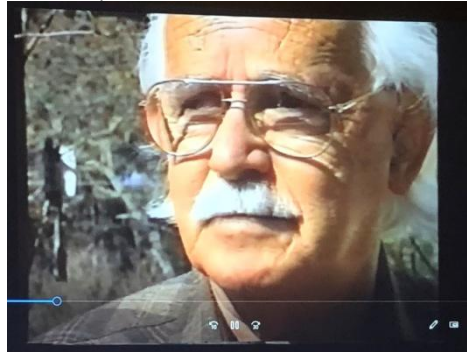

Today's Program

Woody Fridae shared the story of the town of Monticello and the Berryessa Valley that disappeared when Lake Berryessa was filled. There is an exhibit of the Town at the Winters Museum

Monticello was established in 1862. It was vacated in 1955 and inundated a couple of years later as the Lake filled. The town was 10 blocks square. There were about 100 in the Valley. 30 families lived in the town.

(I believe, Perkle Jones)

Woody shared a short video with Dorothy Lang and Perkle Jones, former residents, talking about life in the Town and Valley. Buddy Gardner was raised in the Berryessa Valley attended the school. His family first moved there in 1859.

He and his family relocated in 1955 to the Napa Valley.

The Town did try to fight the Dam project and presented alternative water projects, but were unsuccessful.

How to develop Water without destroying Fertile Land

The map on the opposite page shows how Napa County's plan of developing alternate dams in lieu of the Monticello project may be accomplished without destroying the fertile Monticello Valley.

RED. Shows the water systems now in use, namely the City of Napa's Lakes Milliken and Conn, which have surplus water for sale, and Vallejo's water system of Lakes Curry, Madigan and Frye. It is proposed to sell water to the Vallejo system by a connection between the two systems from Napa to Napa Junction.

BLUE. Shows the Guenoc site which could be developed when Conn water proved inadequate. It can be brought by gravity into Conn Lake and would be of from 120,000 to 620,000 acre feet.

BLACK. Shows the other dam sites that are available for development in sufficient quantity to control all of the run off of Putah Creek as recommended by the State Engineers' Report of 1947.

There is no necessity for building the Monticello Dam and destroying 17,000 acres of fertile land as proposed by the Bureau of Reclamation.

Monticello means little hill in Italian.
